

Excellent Questions.

A friend asked if I'd like to participate in a debate/discussion about God.

Below are his questions:

“Does the creator create individual beings, blades of grass, or animals in the wild as well as new worlds yet seen?”

I don't believe the creator creates individual anything. I believe the creator created the brew of dark matter and dark energy, impregnating it with the energies of “go forth and multiply” and “the knowledge of good and evil.” That simple act of creation also set the standard for duality in everything: light and dark, big and small, close and far, good and evil, etc.

However, dark matter is the original creation that allows creation for perpetuity. Dark energy creates the space for dark matter's expansion.

First, the foundation needed to be created for all life. That took billions of light years, and to this day, scientists cannot measure, weigh, nor prove the existence of dark matter or dark energy, but they know it's present and that it takes up over 90% of the universe. For instance, sometimes light is diverted around something in space that scientists cannot see or measure.

Stars evolved and exploded, releasing nutrients necessary for future life forms. Asteroids and meteors shot across the universe and crashed into planets, releasing water and minerals vital for life not yet created.

As time rolled on and life forms finally emerged and evolved, along came the entanglement- the ability for even the tiniest particle to share space with another tiny particle of itself no matter the distance so that what happens to one of the particles also happens to the other simultaneously no matter the distance.

Science has also proved that women decide which sperm to allow for the fertilization of their egg. It could be the slowest sperm. This is all done on vibrational levels and is based on information stored in ancient spiritual libraries and the entanglement. According to monks and others who know such things, each person has their history stored in their Akashic Records.

There is no proof of Akashic Records other than the word of these people.

I believe that entanglement is real. At first, entanglement was simple, but as the population of humans added up and grew to millions and now billions, the threads that joined everything past and present became so numerous that they appear to be entangled.

I believe each baby and its parents control birth, and of course, with entanglement and the creator's spirit always instilled in the process. Everything that lives and breathes is enabled to know the difference between good and evil. We call that ability choice.

So, the creator initially instilled in everything it created the knowledge of good and evil. As time passed and entanglement propagated, the essence of the creator's creations was passed along without needing the creator's assistance.

My friend also asked, "Does your creator require sin?"

I believe we must all be more active in choosing good all the time and in every choice because evil is not a sin forgiven by a priest in confession or a "father in the sky." No, the evil we do is attached to our entanglement, our family entanglements, and so on over the history of our lives.

Our Akashic Records store this information, and at times, when we experience déjà vu, this is us remembering our past. We can cleanse ourselves of past wrong or evil choices by personal contrition and repentance.
