

Imagine a Time.

Imagine when there was no measurement of time as we now know it.

People are born, live, and die, never knowing their age.

While doing that, remember that religion hasn't been invented yet; most people live in a family, group or tribe. Education is within the sphere of survival; always learning how to survive better and longer. Food is abundant, and harvesting is plentiful, but many meat-eating predators exist, even from within the same species.

You can, most likely, recall history lessons, cave drawings, and pictures, allowing you to live, if only for a short time, within a tribe of ancient ancestors.

To live vicariously in that rudimentary time allows you to fully participate without fear or hardship. As you return from imagination to the present time, your gift is a transformative, evolutionary, from then to now, perspective. Perhaps your DNA, now aroused, awakens and carries you along a tidal wave of recollection and understanding, creating wholeness within you.

Written by Peter Skeels © August 3rd, 2025